imagine the possibilities - logging all manner of scientific and environmental data

now your classroom can have extra sensory perception

Training Systems Australia introduces NeuLog neuron logger sensors. The fully autonomous experimental data management system.

Training Systems Australia (TSA) and their development partners have fused educational expertise with wireless technology and microprocessors to develop NeuLog: a line of user friendly tools that aid scientific and hi-tech experimentation in classrooms, labs and outdoors - anywhere that you can take inquiring minds.

NeuLog is a versatile, simple, cost effective enhancement for every learning program that collects and uses physical data from an experiment.

The NeuLog instrument is a compact microchip assembly - a programmable real time data sensor, logger, memory and transmitter all in one - that works automatically with built in wire and wireless communication.

Each NeuLog plug and play module is designed to function independently, either as a stand alone sensor or linked in a chain of up to 50 sensors. Whether chained or free, all NeuLog sensors operate autonomously, storing the incoming data or relaying it to a remote PC.

Together with the powerful NeuLog software, which can analyze huge amounts of data, the NeuLog sensors extend the horizons of data acquisition and analysis beyond the confines of conventional classroom instruction, to create exciting new educational opportunities.

NeuLog brings the world of scientific data into another dimension for educators and students, children and adults, in all kinds of study environments.

The NeuLog sensors operate with equal efficiency either in the school lab or out in the field. Powered by a USB or a battery pack, research can be conducted without the hindrance of wires or cables.
